THE WEST’S
BEST PLACES
TO LIVE
(DID YOUR HOMETOWN MAKE THE LIST?)

GROW YOUR OWN
STRAWBERRIES

NO-FAIL
RECIPES FOR VALENTINE’S DAY

TOP 8 WINES
TO DRINK WITH OYSTERS

CHAMPION SURFER
TOM CURREN &
SON PAT IN SANTA BARBARA

MAKE OVER YOUR MASTER BEDROOM

VISIT US AT SUNSET.COM | FEBRUARY 2016
LAST DECEMBER, my family and I landed at San Francisco International Airport with eight suitcases, two car seats, four carry-ons, and a rickety stroller bound with packing tape. We had just left our close-knit community and the only home our small children had ever known. We were melancholy, jet-lagged, and more than a little out of sorts. Somehow we hauled our oversized load to the tiny bungalow we would inhabit for the next few months and, fumbling for the light switch in unfamiliar rooms, embarked on the process of beginning our brand-new life.

And then it happened. The doorbell rang—and a dear old friend stood on the porch with a split of Champagne and a basket of treats from her favorite places in the neighborhood. Forty-five minutes later, my husband’s closest college buddy arrived with his own family in tow and several boxes of Oakland’s finest artisanal pizza. An hour after that, the doorbell rang again. This time, it was a delivery person with a bag of groceries ordered by a thoughtful colleague—bread, butter, eggs, jam, and all the staples a family of four might need for the next two days. That first night in our temporary residence, I vowed never again to take a warm welcome for granted.

Places are only as good as the people who inhabit them. Case in point: our annual list of the best communities to live in the West. Sure, you could look solely at the statistics—median home price, school test scores, cultural diversity—and make an informed decision about where to put down roots. But then there are the intangibles: the small gestures, the unexpected generosity that transcends mere demographics to create a deeply personal connection.

On this month’s cover shoot, the Sunset team shadowed world-champion surfer Tom Curren and his son Pat—no slouch in the surf department himself—around their native Santa Barbara, a city that has earned its bragging rights on sustainability. Often described as reclusive, the elder Curren unexpectedly insisted on making hearty, elaborate sandwiches on his surfboard for each member of the crew during a picnic lunch on a Santa Barbara beach. At the evening bonfire, after a bit of prompting, he even brought out his guitar. It was, as they say, a moment. Here’s to hometowns everywhere and those who make them such meaningful places to come back to.

IRENE EDWARDS, EDITOR-IN-CHIEF | @irene_sunset | readerletters@sunset.com

JOIN THE SUNSET COMMUNITY | Write to us, tweet us, or tag us on your Instagram; we promise we read each and every one of your comments.

facebook.com/SunsetMagazine | @sunsetmag on Instagram | @SunsetMag on Twitter | @pinterest.com/SunsetMag

New & Now

Decadent Valentine’s treats
Sinful sweets abound on our Chocolate Desserts board on Pinterest. Get our recipes for sugared chocolate beignets, gluten-free molten mousse cups (above), streusel brownies, and more: sunset.com/chocolatepins.

Follow us on Tumblr
Filled with striking visuals, our Tumblr page is where we reveal our latest obsessions—like glazed doughnuts, colorful indoor orchids, and dreamy bedding. Join the fun: sunsetmag.tumblr.com.

Hit our slopes
The West’s mountains are the country’s best. Our guide includes our favorite resorts, lift-ticket deals, and après perks. Bring on the fresh powder: sunset.com/ski.
WELCOME HOME

Falling in love with a place is like falling in love with a person. Sometimes you just know. For our Best Hometowns 2016, Sunset editors searched the West from the Arizona desert to the Washington coast to find towns, cities, and neighborhoods that are easy to love. All five winners boast a strong sense of community—the gift of making you feel like you belong. Come do some window shopping. You may find your new hometown.

Photographs by ERIN KUNSEL.
Barbara, and the adjacent Bren School of Environmental Science & Management, new activists keep pouring in, taking jobs with the city (Ward is a UCSB graduate) and spearheading local environmental groups. Think renewable human energy.

Water isn’t the only front on which Santa Barbara’s sustainability shines. Virtually no stone is left unturned. The city (and county) outlawed plastic bags. Battling plastic bottles, the CEC set up water stations in schools so kids can refill the water containers they have. The stations have counters so the kids can see the results. So far, they’ve been used almost 2 million times. Residents are encouraged to eat local (less carbon footprint) and get out of fossil fuel-burning cars. The city hosts three green car shows a year. Winds of ever-expanding bike lanes traverse town.

Renewable energy is a big focus, tapping resources readily at hand. Santa Barbara is currently studying the feasibility of “community choice energy,” with the future aim of producing its own energy—in part via renewable sources like solar energy—and controlling its dispersal too, via a nonprofit overseen by a board of local residents. Offering discounts on solar-panel installation, the CEC has seen solar panels installed on some 480 local rooftops. There is no dearth of sunshine. Ocean at its doorstep, the city is reopening its desalination plant to help deal with the drought.

These efforts are local, but the aim is global. “These are things that other communities can see and say, ‘Oh, we want to do that too,’ and they don’t have to reinvent the wheel,” says King. “And, in the end, we’re all in this together.” —K.M.

RUNNERS-UP

Areata, CA
How green is this university town on California’s North Coast? Areata owns the nation’s first community forest—2,500 acres certified by the Forest Stewardship Council—established to demonstrate sustainable forestry practices. Its even-water is a community asset. An efficient treatment system creates a haven of marshes, grassy sloughs, and mudflats that are home to a stunning variety of flora and fauna. And Humboldt State University has some of the top environmental science and engineering programs in the nation. POPULATION: 17,700. MEDIAN HOME PRICE: $298,000.

Billings, MT
It’s known as an oil and gas center, but Billings has a surprising green streak too. It’s established miles of bike paths, and its Trail Into Trees program has recycled proceeds to plant more than 2,000 trees around town. More recently its new public library joined the ranks of notable LEED Platinum-certified Billings buildings. POPULATION: 109,000. MEDIAN HOME PRICE: $267,700.

Las Cruces, NM
Cities like Davis, California, or Boulder, Colorado, may be more famous as bike-friendly cities, but Las Cruces is gaining on them. It’s creating a network of bike lanes and routes that just earned its recognition from The League of American Bicyclists. Good biking and world-famous green chiles—at a great combination. POPULATION: 101,300. MEDIAN HOME PRICE: $218,300.

SURFER’S DELIGHT

Yes, Tom Curren won three surfing world championships, and as a singer-songwriter he has three critically acclaimed albums. But there’s also an indefinable something more. Like his hometown, Curren possesses style and soul. A few words on Santa Barbara from one of its favorite sons.—K.M.

How long have you lived in Santa Barbara? My parents moved our family here when I was 6 months old. I left for a time when I was about 16 or 17, but it’s my family’s home now.

What makes the city unique? The city has so much to offer. Obviously we have the ocean, but we have the mountains as well. It’s just a really pretty place. Even after all the time I’ve spent here, I can’t say I’ve grown accustomed to it.

Why does it have such a strong environmental ethic? I think the 1960s appeal has a lot to do with it. It started then. There’s really not much room for physical growth here, so we have to be careful about the growth we allow.

For you as a musician, does Santa Barbara provide inspiration? Absolutely. It’s really nice to be in a natural setting when you’re working on music. I suppose you can make music in a less natural setting, but it’s a good place for me to be.

Where’s your favorite place to hear live music? The Santa Barbara Lobero. It’s an incredible venue.

Your favorite Santa Barbara surf spot? Winter, you’ve got Rincon, and in springtime you can go to Hendry’s. But honestly, most of the rest of the year there’s not a lot of surf here. There’s good surf just to the south and north, though.

Best place for a beginner to learn to surf? Leffingwell Beach.

You’ve surfed the world’s best waves. How does this area compare? This is a great place for surf. It’s ideal because of all the different facing beaches along the coast that can support different swell and wind directions and different types of waves. If you’re willing to drive a little, you can get a lot of waves around here.

All that surfing requires caloric restocking. What’s your favorite Mexican restaurant? (Laugh) Burger Express. They serve great Mexican food. And burgers.

Well, then, this may be a repeat. Your favorite burger place? (Laughter) It’s not a burger place, it’s a taco place. El Rincon. Really.

What’s your favorite beach to go to with your family? A tough one, but Rincon.

Where’s the best place to get a taste of the real Santa Barbara? The harbor. We’re a seawall community and the harbor has always remained kind of the same.